POWERFUL PROJECT

TEENS AND ADULTS

NOVEMBER 2011

GENEROSITY

A recent study (09/2011) published in the Proceedings of National Academy of Sciences journal demonstrates that generosity is human nature. Even when nothing is expected in return, more people are likely to be generous than not. However, other studies suggest that most parents label their teens as "selfish" and unlikely to be generous. What do you think is going on here? Do you think teens are having challenges being generous these days and generosity needs to be made more of a priority in their lives? Why and how? Or, do you think teens are indeed generous and we need to be better about highlighting their generous contributions? Why and how?
